

In the state of Pennsylvania abortion is legal, the abortion law limits abortion to life endangerment, rape and incest only. In Pa you also need consent from at least one of your parents before they are allowed to go on with the procedure. But what will this be like in the future? Depending on the state legislation and society a lot could change, depending on what the issue is.

In the future prediction is that birth control will be a lot easier to get and possibly less money, maybe even free towards the poor population, who are getting pregnant and don't have health insurance and can not get access towards medical care. Currently in Pa the cost of your abortion procedure will go up depending on how far along you are in your pregnancy. Within 10 weeks of pregnancy, the abortion pill starts at $450 and can be up to $1,000. Surgical abortions in the first trimester, up to 13 weeks of pregnancy, can cost up to $1,500("How much"). For someone who cannot afford these prices or has no insurance how are they expected to pay for the procedure?

In the future the poor population will start to bring the subject up to society and use it as a way to get their voices heard. By doing so this could affect planned parenthood's by allowing laws to change. Such as the law saying you can only get an abortion with the consent of a parent this could change to not needing consent at all. The prices of the different ways to get an abortion could definitely lower in future years. People find ways to not become a parent in some dangerous ways, some of the poor population can't afford to get an abortion let alone have a kid in the hospital. Even traveling is hard for poor women, traveling to go get the medical help she would need("Abortion access").

With the way society is now with protesting, Pro Life protest and many more I can only predict it getting more aggressive in the future. In the future laws and prices towards birth control and abortion access will be dropped. The percentage of abortions in Pa going up. This could benefit a lot of the poor population by safely going through with things but also making sure if the baby was born it would end up in a safe environment ("Abortion access"). For the rest of the economy the prediction is anger. In the future the poor population won't have to pay for anything health related and that if you make a certain amount of money that you will still have to pay for these things and maybe even more. But this is what could happen in the future with abortion and birth control.

A-lot could happen in the future, good or bad, my predictions could be wrong or right but it has a high chance of being accurate. This is because of what is happening today. Anything can happen in the future but it's today's actions, prices and laws that make me predict prices will drop for the poor and go up for the wealthy. Today's actions make me think more protest against abortions will be happening and laws will be dropped. So in the future a lot of society could be benefited or could be very upset and affected poorly by what was predicted.
